War the Creator

Gelett Burgess, an American writer, penned this gripping account of the profound change that war caused in a young Frenchman he knew. "Because he was my friend, because he was so lovable, because he suffered much, I want to try to tell the story of a boy who, in two months, became a man. I happened to see him first just before the war began, and not again until after he had been wounded; and the change in him was then so great that I could not rest until I had learned how it had been brought about." – From War the Creator (Lee Smalley)
